LEVICE is a small town in western part of the Slovakia lying on the left bank of the lower Hron river. The town is located in the north-eastern corner of the Danubian Lowland, 110 kilometres east from Bratislava, 40 kilometres south-east from Nitra, 32 kilometres south-west from Banská Štiavnica, 55 kilometres south-west from Zvolen and 25 kilometres from the border with Hungary.

It is the capital of the Levice District, which is the largest district in Slovakia at 1,551 square kilometres. The town's heraldic animal is lion with green and yellow being a town's colours. Levice were originally known as Leva, being one of the villages belonging to the parish of St. Martin's Church in Bratka in 1165. It was part of the comitatus Tekov (Bars). The second documental mention is dated back to 14th century.

First attacked by the Turks in 1544, the town was set on fire while the castle was left unharmed. Between 1581 and 1589, the settlement was the seat of the Captaincy of Lower Hungary. The town was held by the Turks for two decades from 1663 to 1685. Under the Ottoman empire, Leva was the very center of the sandjak, part of the Uyvareyalet.

Ottoman rule came to an end in the summer of 1685, when the Austrian Imperial Army led by General de Souches claimed an important victory in the battle of Levice.

During the anti-Habsburg revolution of 1709, the fort was blown up by kurucos. After the break-up of Austria-Hungary, the town became a part of Czechoslovakia (confirmed by the Treaty of Trianon in 1920). As part of the breakup of Czechoslovakia under the Munich Agreement in World War II, the town again belonged to Hungary from 1938 to 1945. At the end of the Second World War it was returned to the restored Czechoslovakia, 75% of the town's Hungarian population was deported and replaced by Slovaks, thus the ratio of Hungarians fell from 89% to 12%.
